FUNERAL HELD OF JOHN A. EVANS

Many Speakers Testify in Feeling Terms to Moral Worth of Dead Man.

The funeral services over the remain of John A. Evans were held yesterday n the Eighteenth ward meeting house. There was a large attendance. The floral offerings were numerous and included many beautiful pieces. The services were presided over by Bishop Clawson of the Eighteenth ward, to whom Mr. Evans was first counselor to whom Mr. Evans was first counselor. The first speaker was Thomas E. Taylor, who was manager of the Deseret News when Mr. Evans went into its employ as a collector. He spoke at length of the early life of Mr. Evans on the paper and how he rose from one position to another until he became cashier. He spoke of his willingness to do any task that was assigned him, and of his great popularity with his employers and fellow employes.

The next person to pay respects to the fellow employes.

The next person to pay respects to the dead man was Elias A. Woodruff, the advertising manager of the Deseret News, who was closely associated with Mr. Evans in business life. He spoke of the great work Mr. Evans had been doing and with what good cheer he did it. He said that they had urged him to take a vacation, but that he insisted on attending to his business duties. One of his best traits was accuracy, said Mr. his best traits was accuracy, said Mr. Woodruff.

Apostic Charles W. Penrose, editor of the Deseret News, then spoke on the character of the dead man. He said that he had known him to lead only the best life, and that during his business career he had always met with success. His associations with the News had been great consequence, and he had been with it from its early struggles to its pres-ent prosperity. He spoke of him as modest and retiring and always faithful in his work. His home life was as beau tiful as his business life was success ful.

After Mr. Penrose's discourse the ward choir sang "I Need Thee Every Hour."
The body was then taken to the City cemetery for interment. Those who survive Mr. Evans are a wife, a brother, two sisters, and nine children, the eldest of whom is 18.
